Author: United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

Realese Date: Expected @@expectedReleaseDate@@

Appellant, presently confined in federal custody after conviction of a federal crime (during trial for which he was represented by retained counsel), appeals the order of the district court, made on his Â§ 2255 petition, denying his motion for vacation of sentence. The basis of appellant's motion was his alleged lack of counsel on appeal, although he had allegedly requested such representation. The court below denied relief, upon the theory there was no proof of such request, and that appellant had waived any right to such representation (C.T. 13, 18-19).
